CONNECTICUT POLITICS.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE HERALD. Danger to the Democratic Cause.

HARTFORD, Conn., March 25, 1867. their ultra speakers during this the last week of the canvass. If they do so the radical papers will re-port their speeches verbaum, or at least select the most objectionable portions of their remarks for comment. copperheads have been kept in the background thu with infinite advantage to the democratic ticket; but if y show their heads now the effect will be most disas-Mr. W. H. Barnum (opponent of the showman is Mr. W. H. Barning opposition of the snowman, what the very appearance of some of these men on platform, at a democratic meeting, will have a aging effect. But such men as W. W. Eaton (the most of the copperheads, as well as one of the smartest persions in the State) propose to open the ball, efforts are being made to choke him off. Seymour Foucey would also like to secure a portion of the in case the State is revolutionized; but if they are red to come out there will assuredly be very little be democrate to crox over.

allowed to come out there will assuredly be very little for the democrats to crox over.

At the present hour the advantages are decidedly in favor of the English ticket. The republicans are confessedly buckwarm, and some of the leaders despair of carrying the State. Several of their speakers from a distance have made some trifling excuse for not fulfilling their appointments after coming here and looking over the prospects. This was the case with General Nye and Carl schurz. The unpopularity of the hambug Barnum adds to the general demoralization of the republicans, while the perpetual fire of the Heratto a thim and his radical coadjutors contributes greatly to the discomfiture of the deminant party in the State. But, favorable as the prespects are for the democratic ticket, their success may be turned into an ignominious defeat, if the copperheads are permitted to come out from the seclusion to which they have thus far been wisely consigned during the prescht campaign.

SIAFFORD, Tolland county, Conn., March 25, 1867. Probably no manufacturing town in this State felt the depressing effect of the upsettled state of the country more sensibly than this. In former times the cheering and almost accessant sound of the spindles of eighteen large cotton and weellen factories was to be heard, while sow the me of many of them lie comparatively idle, and othin a week five or six of them will be oblived to ospend operations altogether. It is here that nearly half of the whole satinct used in this country is nanufactured, giving employment to several hundred test market for the description of goods manufacgred here was formerly in the South; but the legison of Congress has closed that market nearly completely and left large amounts of goods on the hancs of manufacturers. The South want the goods but lave not the means to pay for them, and the prospect of their ever being so is considered so slim, with the style legislation now prevailing at Washington, that the manufacturers dare not incur the very heavy expenses of keeping their mills in full operation. This fact contributes largely to the unpopularity of the domnant party in the manufacturing district, where we of the most extensive manufacturers who ormerly acted with the republicans now sting against nd denouncing the course of the raticals, espewith reference to their oppressive legalation in rd to the South. The county of Tollaid, which lartford county comprises the First Confressional hetrict, gave 447 majority for Hawley in 1861, but to dge from the interest manifested by leading epublicthe success of the democratic ticket this year, it s fair to estimate that this majority will be co down est one-half, thereby materially aiding in ending ung held in the Town Hall on Saturday evening as the spacious room was densely crowded, alshough the roads were in an almost impassable condition. On the occasion of a radical meeting a few evenings before the hall was not half full. The speakers on saurday evening were Hon. James F. Babcock, of New Haven, and B. & Cieveland, of Hartford, both of whom have been engaged in effectively stumping the State during the present carries. In the course of his remarks Mr. Babcock referred to the inconsistency of the radicals in Congress in admitting Colonel Stokes, of Tennessee, who was originally a secessionist, to a year in the House, while they refused admittance to Judge Sharkey, of Mississippi, who had nobly stood up for the Union if the darkest had facet perilous period. Stokes now votes for placing his fellow citizens of the South under a military despotium, while Judge Sharkey is denied the privilege of speaking a word in Congress in behalf of the suffering had humilisted people of his State. Mr. Babcock maintained that the South had constitutional rights that should be respected by Congress now that the rebellion was deer, and the Southern people were in a condition of submission to the government. He expressed the half of the state is more and Thad Sevens were stimptiaged in the suffering districts of the South would prove a submission to the southern people were in a representation of the South would prove a submission to the south by personal and reflect restoration of the South would prove a submission to the south submission to the interpretation that the speedy state of the things the districts of the South would prove a submission of the south might be compelled to submit to the iron makery rule established by Congress, but it would be he spacious room was densely crowded, allo

in the south by personal and reference of the South would prove a precipation of the South would prove a manufacturing districts of the State. He declared that, he South might be compeled to submit to the iron mining rule established by Congress, but it would be high you are to the damind of the highwayman, and would engender a bitter that dimost irradishe feeling of hostility in the South against the North. He prayed that the sentiment of thated which the radicals are arousing would be overcome by more mild and conciliatory legislaton, when the majority in Congress should be swayed by particule, and not inhuman and unchristian motives at beinging about an amicable settlement with our conflict of the place in the councils of the nation now usurped by intolerance and bigotry. Mr. B. exposed the treachery of Governor Hawley in having pledged himself to sustain Mr. Foster for the United States Senate and afterwards describing him; in professing to sustain the platform on which Lincoln was nominated at Raitimore, and in affording reason to suppose that he supported the policy of the Precisient instead of that of the radicals. For these and other causes Mr. Babooks armined that Senator Foster and other influential republicans would not "crowd themselves among the mourners" at Governor Hawley's political funeral on the first of April next.

Mr. Cleveland followed in a stirring speech, in which he explained his reasons for leaving the ropublican party, and, like his friend Babook, who had prepared most of the platforms, addresses and resolutions of the republican party since 1835, johing in the great constitutional movement led off by the democratic party in Connecticut. He claimed that the war was fought for the Union, and now that the rebellion was crushed, the Union as connecticut or Massachusetts, and sked why, it ten States were off of the Union, as the radicals avered throughout the land. He claimed that they were both equally hostile to the best to the connecticut from radical mistrus, and to the time when the
